Then they took the young man, who had begun to puff a Turkish cigarette with the deepest dyed aroma imaginable, to the Central Office, and afterward forwarded him to the Tombs. In his light and ioud-checked English coat, his creased trousers, his brown derby and his kaleidoscopic linen he created a sitr in the line of prisoners.

"I'll go back if you want me to," he wolunteered, "but what's the use of rushing it. I'll see father and talk it over with him. I guess, though, it's mother's doings."

Haslett had the time of his life while in New York. He took in the shows, strutted up and down Broadway, frequented the billiard pariors and took an occasional ride in a hansom on the avenue just to get a little of everything. He was held till his father arrives to get him.

FIRES ABOUND DURING STORM

Numerous Alarms Call Firemen to Threatening Blazes, and Slippery Streets Handicap Their Work.

There seemed to be more fire alarms than usual early to-day, and the fire men were handicapped greatly by the slippery streets. The horses could barely keep their feet.

At 1,10 A. M. the engines were called to Eleventh avenue and Thirty-third street to put out a blaze in a one-story building used by the O'Rourke Con fire caught from an overheated stove and the damage was $100.

The next alarm, at 2.45 A. M., called the fire-fighters to No. 30 Second avenue, a five-story tenement, from which eight families were driven by a blaze in the basement. Somebody had thrown a lighted match which set fire to a lounge. The damage was nominal, but the tenants were scared by the smoke, The basement of Wachtel Bros.' grocery store, No. 380 Third avenue, was scorched at 3 A. M., but the damage was light. At 3.30 A. M. the firemen got a call to No. 434 West Fifty-eighth street, a fivestory flat building opposite Roosevelt Hospital. The blaze was due to a curtain coming into contact with a gas jet, Ten families in the house rushed out on the slippery sidewalks, but the blaze was put out with small loss. The hospital authorities were apprehensive of a panic among the patients, but cool-
